Description:

New York City's legendary Lower East Side is one of the oldest, most historically significant and complex quarters in America. Though recent gentrification has displaced most multigenerational immigrant families and mom-and-pop shops, the district still retains some of the character that made it so unique to the rest of the city.

This book is truly dear to my heart. I lived on Madison Street in the early seventies and I recall those old streets. As the last immigrants from Sicily the neighborhood was mostly Asian. To get our olive oil, cold cuts and cheese we would walk to Di Palos on Grand Street. My jaw dropped when I saw the picture of Savoia Bakery. They made wonderful strawberry shortcakes and cannolis. The Bowery bank was where us kids from P.S.2 started our savings account. I can't believe it is now a night club. Pictures of Seward Park High School also brought many memories. Along with the Essex Street market. I hear there are many trendy restaurants there now. That was not the case back in the seventies and eighties. For anyone who wants a peek at what the Lower East Side was a generation or two ago, this book is an excellent resource. It is amazing to hear that it is hip and trendy and all the rage. When I lived there I walked as fast as I could to and from school, church (St. Teresas on Henry Street and St. Josephs for the occasional Italian mass) and home. Times have certainly changed. Thank you Eric Ferrara and David Bellel for this wonderful book. It is certainly a blast from my past.
